"Thirteen Million Kiss" Man Heals Rich Girl's Heart With $3,625 Balm

NEW YORK, Jan. 30.—The $50,000 breach of promise suit of Miss Mary Lillian Phipps, wealthy member of the younger set of Teaneck, against William Russell Smith, of Tenafly, came to an abrupt end in the circuit court of Hackensack following the publication of several ardent love missives from Smith to Miss Phipps and made public by her.

$3,625 Ends It All

With the court room crowded and prominent friends of Miss Phipps ready to testify, the wealthy young Teaneck bachelorette effected a settlement for $3,625. It was announced by Smith's attorney, former Congressman Archibald C. Hart.

Miss Phipps said that she was thoroughly satisfied, as all that she had sought was a vindication of her honor. She declared that she would distribute the money accruing to her as a result of the settlement, to charity.

The settlement was revealed when the case was adjourned until March 3, the day on which Miss Phipps reaches her majority, at the request of counsel for both sides.

"Judge Cutler has agreed to lay over this case for final decision after March 3," Hart said, in the presence of Frank M. McDermitt, counsel for Miss Phipps.

This was agreeable to both sides. On March 3 Miss Phipps will become of legal age and judgment may be rendered in her own name instead of that of her uncle, Irving S. Van Loan, who brought the action for her.

"Mr. Smith has agreed to drop his counter-suit of conspiracy and blackmail against Mr. and Mrs. Van Loan. Furthermore, Miss Phipps has agreed to drop a criminal charge, based on promise of marriage, against Mr. Smith.

"She also has agreed to settle the breach of promise action for $3,625. The sudden termination of the suit created a great deal of surprise in the crowded court room, where a number of friends of the principals had gathered.

Principals in Case.

Miss Phipps, a comely young woman of twenty, and wealthy in her own right, makes her home with her aunt and uncle at Teaneck. The Van Loan residence is one of the show places of the section. Mr. Van Loan is head of the Irving S. Van Loan engineering corporation, with offices in the Times building in Manhattan.

Smith is 27 years old. He is a member of the wholesale grocery firm of Sweeney, Demarest and Smith, of Tenafly. He also teaches Sunday school in the West Side Presbyterian Church of Englewood, and has been active in religious and church work.

On January 26, Supreme Court Examiner Harry Schirmer held a preliminary investigation into the charges to get admitted facts. At this hearing three letters by Smith were produced in evidence, which Smith admitted having written.

One of the letters from Smith to the plaintiff, in which Smith called her his "honey girl," and enclosed $3,000,000 kisses, follows:

Bird and Bud Messages.
May 14, 1919.

"Sweetheart—
"Do the birds tell you that I love you? Do the flowers, through their beauty, tell you I love you? Then the world is a happy place for you. Just to know that you love me a little makes me very happy."

"I want your love. I want to earn it and be worthy as well as any man can be worthy of a true woman."

"My life is like a page of old history. There are two Bills. The one you know, you always see his best side apparently, but he is like that all day long, every day. Sweetheart, I have always cultivated the good things into my nature so that I will be found with as great a number of merits as any man. This is not spoken in vanity. The other Bill is of fiction, one of imagination. Can you believe anyone sane when they tell you they lived through the characters of books?"

He Quotes Balzac.
"I most perfectly lived in the lives of Balzac's great characters, Raphael and Louis Lambert. I lived a riotous life, loved, dissipated and died by inches alternately in the most glorious and most wretched manner possible.

MISS MARY LILLIAN PHIPPS, wealthy New York girl, who sued her "thirteen-million-kiss" man, a Sunday school teacher, for $50,000 for failure to marry her and who later accepted $3,625 and called it square.

"I want you to know some of the great characters and will read of them some time. I like to quote to you from them. Here is a passage: 'The aged centurion is speaking to the young man Raphael. Raphael has made up his mind that life is not worth living and is waiting until darkness to throw himself into the Seine.'

"He steps into the curio shop and talks to the centurion to pass the intervening time. This one-sided conversation issued:

Great Secret of Life.

"Is it possible to stay the course of life? Has a man been known to die by halves? Before you came here you had made up your mind to kill yourself, but all at once mysteriously filled your mind and you think no more about death. You child, does not any one day of your life afford mystery more absorbing? Listen to me, I saw the licentious days of the regency. I was like you then in poverty. I have baked my bread; but for all that I am now a centurion with a couple of years to spare and a millionaire to boot. 'Misery makes the making of me. Ignorance has made me learned. I will tell you in a few words the great secret of human life. Two instinctive processes exhaust the springs of life. Two verbs cover all the forms which these two causes of death may take—'to will' and 'to have your will.' Between these two limits of human activity the wise have discovered an intermediate formula, to which I owe my good fortune and long life.

Tells of Moderation.

"To will consumes us and to have our will destroys us, but to know steeps our feeble organisms into perpetual calm. In me thought destroys will, so that power is relegated to the ordinary functions of my economy. In a word, it is not in the heart which can be broken, nor in the senses that become deadened, but in the brain that cannot waste away and survives everything else that I have set my life. Moderation has kept my mind and body unruined. Yet I have seen the whole world, I have learned all languages, lived after every manner. I have left a Chinaman money, taken his father's corpse as a pledge; slept in an Arab's tent on the security of his bare word, signed contracts in every capital of Europe, and left my gold without hesitation in savage wigwags. I have attained everything because I have known how to despise all things.

Spring of Happiness.

"My one ambition has been to see. Is not sight, in a manner, insight? And to have knowledge or insight is not that to have instructive possession? To be able to discover the very substance of fact and to write its essence to our hearts. Of material possessions, what abides with you but an idea? Think, then, how glorious must be the life of a man who can start all reality upon his thought, place the spring of happiness within himself and draw thence uncounted pleasures in ideas, uncolored by earthly stains, thought is the key to all pleasures. The miser's gains are caused without his cares. Thus I have soared above this world where my enjoyment has intellectual joy. I have reveled in the contemplation of seas, peoples, forests and mountains. I have seen all things calmly and without weariness. I have set my desires on nothing; I have waited in expectation of everything.

All Waking Dreams.

"I have walked to and fro in the world as in a garden round about my dwelling, troubles, loves, and ambitions, losses and sorrows, as men see them are for me ideas which I transmute into waking dreams! I express and transpose instead of feeling them; I divert myself with them as if they were romances which I could read by the power of vision within me. As I have never overtaxed my constitution, I still enjoy robust health; and as my mind is imbued with all the force that I have not wasted, this head of mine is even better furnished than my gallery. 'The true millions be here, he said (striking his forehead). I spend delicious days in communing with the past; I summon before me whole countries, places, extents of sea, the fair faces of history in imaginary seraglio. I have all the women I never possessed. Your wars and revolutions come up before me for adjustment.

Fervent Admiration.

"What is feverish fugitive admiration for some more or less brightly colored piece of flesh and blood; some more or less rounded human form; what of all the disasters that wait as do erratic ugliness, compared with the magnificent powers of conjuring up the whole world within your soul, compared with the immeasurable joys of movement, untroubled by the course of time, unclouded by the fetters of space; the joys of beholding all things, of comprehending all things, of leaning over the parapet of the world to question the other spheres, to hearken to the voice of God?"

"Do I tire you, sweetheart, with all this? Do you think your love is sane?"

"I love you, honey girl. Here's 13,000,000 x x x BILL."

Early Sunday.

Extracts from other letters of previous date read:

"The beauty of love lies in its life. Oh! My beloved, how beautiful you are. You have called me forth to life." And:

"I see your name written on the clouds. I think you are the sweetest little girl that ever was."
